Nice job on the landslide literature! Several papers I hadn't seen before.

These are quite good but I suggested some edits. The most substantive one is that I did not think the pick list was the right approach for the landslide recommendations. We shouldn't suggest that just improving identification or landslide-prone areas or monitoring by itself could be adequate.

Thanks for the offer to review.

Hi Rob/Jeff--

Alan and his team have completed drafting our decision rationale for both the forestry riparian and landslide issues (see attached). We'd welcome any feedback you may have. Specifically focusing on is the science and other statements in the document accurate? Are there any key arguments or research missing that would support our decision? Comments by Friday, Sept. 26th much appreciated but if you need a little extra time, let us know.

Bottom Line: Both issues will be a basis for disapproving OR's coastal nonpoint program. The state needs to do more.

We're still working on finalizing our rationales for the forestry roads and pesticides issues and will share those with your when they are ready along with our response to comments for all the the forestry comments. Then we'll turn our full focus to ag.

As background:

You can find our proposed findings from Dec. 2013 at: <http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/oregonDocket/OR%20CZARA%20Decision%20Doc%2012-20-13.pdf>

And our original 1998 conditional approval findings for OR's program at: <http://coastalmanagement.noaa.gov/nonpoint/docs/findor.txt> (See Section X for the discussion of the additional management measures for forestry).

If you have any questions, please let Alan or me know.
